

THE NATIVE GARDEN

At R.H. Dana

SO MUCH POTENTIAL!

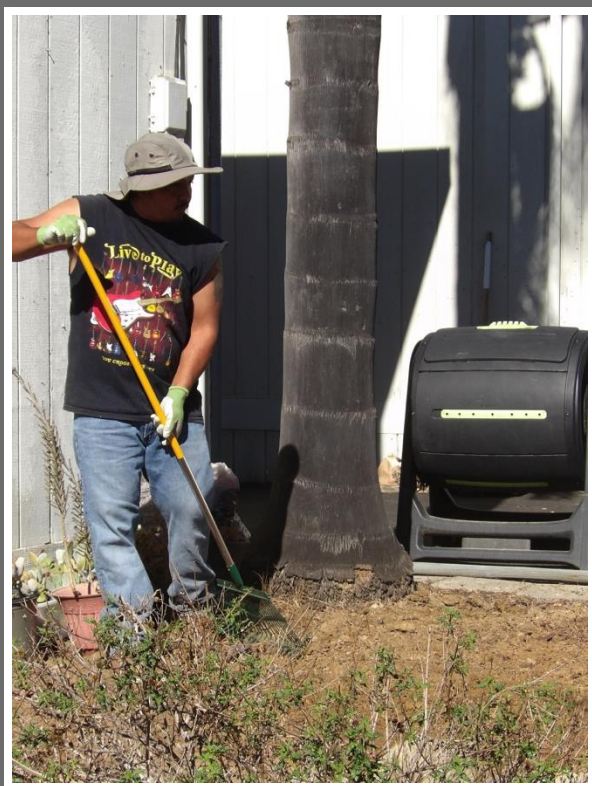

A new project is underway at R.H. Dana. A garden in need of T.L.C is finally getting a make-over. Trimming, watering and weeding helps bring some color to forgotten plants. Watch as this garden comes alive...

This orange tree was revived and is now bearing fruit.

A team of parents and students work together and provide the help necessary to make this project a success.

The area was once covered in weeds but the cleanup revealed a beautiful space that can be used to develop an California native plant garden. Hopefully this garden will attract birds, butterflies, and other creatures, a place for students to learn surrounded by nature.

It took two days to clear the area and we could not have done it without our many brave volunteers. We will meet again to fill the space with native plants and welcome anyone who wants to participate.

The kids take a well-deserved cookie break

Some plants are already established...

Others will soon be planted...
